

Additional Information on Disclosure for the Tokyo Stock Exchange Restructuring Briefing

Thank you for joining in the FPCJ's press briefings.

At the April 11, 2022 briefing on "The Tokyo Stock Exchange Restructuring's Impact on Japanese Companies and the Economy" by Gakushuin University Prof. Professor Hideki Kanda, there was a question regarding companies which did not meet continued listing criteria, and whether their names, the criteria they did not meet, and their plans to meet the listing criteria were disclosed. The professor sent the following additional information after the briefing.

A video of the briefing is also available, so if you were unable to participate in the briefing, please take a look at it.

<Follow-up Answer>

Companies which did not meet the continued listing criteria, and their plans, were disclosed on the JPX website at the time the new market segments started.

1. List of Companies

<https://www.jpx.co.jp/english/equities/market-restructure/market-segments/index.html>

In the "Process of transition to the new market segments" section near the bottom of this page, there is a link to an Excel file called "List of Market Segment Selection Results." This file includes the results of market segment selection by every company, and has a column with checkmarks indicating companies which have disclosed plans to meet continued listing criteria.

2. Company Plans for Meeting Continued Listing Criteria

On this information page for individual investors, if you click on "Company Information Service" and then open the "Listed Company Search" page, you can open the "Listed company details (basic information)" page for individual companies. Under the "Timely disclosure information" tab, there is a section called "Plans for meeting continued listing criteria" (this section is only available through the Japanese search).
