With the support of the Government of Japan, Unitaid is establishing Africa's first regional medical liquid oxygen production facilities in Kenya and Tanzania. These investments represent a significant step forward in strengthening regional manufacturing capacity and addressing critical gaps in access to life-saving oxygen therapy across the continent. In parallel, Unitaid is working to expand access to medical oxygen for newborns and infants in humanitarian and low-resource settings, where respiratory distress remains one of the leading causes of mortality. These efforts aim to support countries in delivering on the promise of Universal Health Coverage (UHC) by ensuring that essential health interventions reach those most in need. This official TICAD9 side event will bring together high-level representatives from the Governments of Japan, Kenya, and Tanzania, alongside private sector actors, international organizations, and civil society. The discussion will focus on how strategic public-private partnerships can contribute to sustainable oxygen access, health system resilience, and pandemic preparedness across Africa. Participants will explore opportunities to scale up proven models of oxygen access, strengthen regional production and supply chains, and mobilize further investment in essential health technologies. The event will also highlight Japan's leadership in global health and its commitment to advancing UHC through innovation, health equity, and international cooperation.
